

AfroIndigenous Hondurans in Resistance: US Drug War, Violent Displacement and Migration

Tuesday, October 6th, 6 pm

Tate Hall Room 215

University of Missouri, 519 South 9th Street

Alfredo López is a leader in the Organización Fraternal Negra Hondureña/The Black Fraternal Organization of Honduras, a federation that works to protect and defend the Garífuna peoples' right to their culture and their ancestral land on the Caribbean coast.

López will discuss his people's struggle against the negative impacts of tourism and other mega-projects, and the role of state security forces in their displacement. He will also describe how US-backed projects and US aid to the military and police contribute to violence and fuel Honduran migration.

Since the 2009 military coup, murders and attacks against Honduran human rights defenders have reached alarming levels. The US continues to send tens of millions of dollars in Drug War aid to the Honduran police and military who have been involved in human rights abuses.

Image from www.BeingGarifuna.com