

Join us in learning directly from Fermina, an Indigenous Mixteca farmer from Oaxaca, Mexico. Fermina has been part of the technical team of CEDICAM for over 14 years, promoting her experiences of soil conservation, reforestation of native trees, rainwater collection, conservation of native seeds and food production, while promoting the importance of conserving a local food culture that includes products grown in the milpa system.

CEDICAM - The Center for Integrated Small Farmer Development in the Mixteca is a community-run project emphasizing reforestation efforts, native seed use, the promotion of local markets & food consumption and sustainable farming practices. One of their key models is farmer-to-farmer knowledge sharing.
